POLO FACTS

THE BASICS

The word "POLO" is supposedly derived from "pulu", Tibetan for willow, of which the original balls were made.

First recorded polo matches were played in Persia over 2500 years ago.

Introduced into England in 1869, imported it to the U.S. in 1876 and last played at the Olympics in 1936.

THE GROUND

The polo ground is 300 yards long, 160 yards wide (boarded) and 200 yards wide if unboarded. Boarded means the field has a 12 inch upright board bounding the perimeter which stops the ball rolling out. The goal posts, positioned at each end, are 8 yards apart.

THE BALL

Used in outdoor polo is made of hard, white plastic and is a little more than 3 inches in diameter.

THE MALLET

Is 48 to 54 inches depending on the height, if the pony and the reach of the player. Generally made of ashwood, bamboo, or maple.

THE MATCH

The opening play is known as the throw-in. A polo match consists of 6 chukkers (periods) of 7.5 minutes each. It's customary at polo matches to invite the public onto the field at halftime to tread in the divots kicked up by the horses. No left-handed players are allowed. Polo is a co-ed sport.

THE PLAYERS

Polo teams don't have coaches. Coaches are considered an expensive luxury and duplicate the duties of the team captain. There are 4 players.

THE HORSES

Polo ponies are ideally fast, energetic and docile. Most have some throughbred breeding. Most ponies are between 13 hands and 16 hands. Horse manes are shaved or roached and tails are braided to stay out of the way of mallet and rains. All horse breeds are allowed to play Polo with no height restriction.

100 MPH+ BALL SPEED

Polo is the second fastest team sport (after hockey) with the ball traveling at speeds up to 110 mph. At one point, the mounts used for polo were restricted in height and were indeed "ponies." Those restrictions were removed from the game, and now polo ponies are actually horses, usually thoroughbreds or thoroughbred crosses, and they're fast!
